CALL FOR PAPERS

Theme

“Strengthening People’s Organizing for Community Development”

College of Social Work and Community Development,
University of the Philippines, Diliman, Quezon City
07-09 October 2020

BACKGROUND

Globally, recent political events have been marked by the twin advances of modern populism and authoritarianism. Benjamin Moffitt, a fellow at Sweden’s Uppsala University, identified three core elements of modern populism, namely: (1) frames either leftist or rightist politics as a battle between the will of ordinary people and corrupt or self-serving elites; (2) deliberate use of “bad manners” to shock the establishment and prove the politician's credentials as one of “the people”; and (3) the use or manufacture of a crisis to justify the call to revolt. Modern authoritarianism, on the other hand, simply means the absence of democracy. Erica Frantz of the Michigan State University sheds two important features of modern authoritarianism, namely: (1) eating out of democracy from within which means dismantling the institutions designed to check authority and protect human rights (e.g. the judiciary and the media); and (2) use of personalist rule characterized by installation of loyalists in key positions of power, use of popular sentiment as a way of justifying decisions, and maintaining security forces loyal to the leader. Modern day authoritarians in various countries in the world today started out as modern day populists who were democratically elected. These leaders argue that since they are the living embodiment of the masses duly elected by the people, people should put their complete trust in them and continue to grant them extraordinary powers so they can successfully solve the people's problems. But studies and life lessons in history have shown that this kind of subservience to a populist authority has led to the marginalization of many people because the policies such leaders enact are often anti-poor, discriminatory, repressive, and violent. In spite of this, many people are committed to reclaiming power and are collectively organizing to: (1) expose and challenge dominant and oppressive structures in society, (2) hold government and big business accountable in the context of human rights, and (3) shape their own empowerment and development.

CONFERENCE GOAL AND SUB-THEMES

This year's conference generally seeks to serve as a venue for concerned individuals, groups, and organizations to reaffirm the value of grassroots organizing and leadership in addressing local, national, and global issues and concerns. Specifically, it aims to showcase how community organizing is applied in the following conference subthemes:

- Participatory and Indigenous Governance
- Emerging Forms of Social Movements
- Organizing for Environmental and Climate Justice
- Organizing for Gender Justice
- Peoples' Science and Technology
- Emancipatory Arts and Culture
- Community-based Responses for Safety and Security

The organizers encourage authors to submit work- in-progress papers and use the conference as a venue to reflect on ideas and engage on future directions of community development practice, education, research, and advocacy.

CONFERENCE OBJECTIVES

At the end of the conference, the participants will be able to:

- Learn practical and innovative strategies in community development practice, education, research and advocacy
- Share ideas and experiences of community organizing towards community development
- Synthesize knowledge on the identified sub-themes
- Establish networks among community development practitioners and academics

ABSTRACT SUBMISSION

1. Abstracts should not be longer than 300 words. The paper's argument must be clearly articulated and situated in community development literature. The text should be written in plain English and, as much as possible, must be free from jargon.
2. Authors must indicate the sub-theme area in which their proposals may fall.

3. Submissions should include the author's name, institutional affiliation, and contact information (email address, mobile/telephone number, and mailing address).
4. Abstracts should be sent to cdspconference2020@gmail.com not later than 28 February 2020.
5. For inquiries, please contact CDSP Conference Secretariat thru email address: cdspconference2020@gmail.com.
